First founded in 1857 as Athens female College, Tennessee Wesleyan has enjoyed an ongoing and dynamic relationship with the United Methodist Church. In the late 1860s, it became one of the first institutions of higher education in the South to admit both men and women. Over the decades, the college has endured wars, economic depressions and several name changes, but it has never lost its identity and place as an important center of learning in southeast Tennessee. In the 21st century, it continues its tradition of providing students with the resources and support they need to grow into themselves and their future success.

Tennessee Wesleyan is especially proud of the commitment its coaches and athletes make to achieving excellence in the classroom. The college believes that student-athletes are students first and athletes second. A winning season and trip to a national championship make wonderful memories, but athletes' educations and future successes comes first. Tennessee Wesleyan's coaches and athletic department make every effort to provide the college's athletes with the resources needed to succeed academically.

The College's dedication to athletics is based on the belief that sports are a vital part of a comprehensive education and that athletic participation and competition teach important life lessons such as cooperation, dedication, leadership, discipline and respect that enhance an athlete's education and future success.
